
Shark and Sawfish From Fresh-Water Lake

• This photograph was made by Doctor Robert R. Miller, Associate Curator of Fishes of the Museum of Zoology, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan, while on a fish and fisheries survey of Guatemala. The specimens were taken from Lake Izabal, which is about thirty miles inland from the Atlantic Coast town of Livingston. Doctor Miller points out that the only other fresh-water lake in the northern hemisphere containing marine types of these groups is Lake Nicaragua.

A Biologist's Vacation

• Because of the interest shown in "Buffalo Run" and "Packing Over the Continental Divide", published in past issues of Turtox News, we are again calling attention to that section of Montana west of the town of Choteau. The region abounds in biological interest, for wild game and bird life are plentiful, and the mountain flora makes it a botanist's paradise. During the early part of the summer season, flowers are amazingly abundant and many species of orchids occur in the coniferous forests.

Ranches in this part of Montana offer comfortable accommodations and excellent food to vacationists. Daily horseback rides over scenic trails, trout fishing in mountain streams, pack trips to the wilder areas, or just plain rest and relaxation are there to enjoy. And the person interested in any phase of biology or nature study will find a wealth of material to study, collect or photograph. For all details on a vacation in this region, write to Mr. & Mrs. J. W. White, Deep Canyon Ranch, Post Office Box 728, Choteau, Montana.

Conservation of Natural Resource Use Workshop of Fresno State College

• From June 13 to June 24, 1949, there will be conducted at Fresno State College, Fresno, California a session directed to conservation. Professor Leo F. Hadsall, Director in Charge, reports that most of the time will be spent in the field under the skilled leadership of specialists representing Federal, State and private agencies. A complete copy of the program may be secured from Professor Hadsall.
